

I see no reason for local stations to fear XM radio. If local stations don't offer services needed (i.e. up to the second weather, traffic reports, and other services which can improve the knowledge base of their listners), then listners should have the choice to purchase such services. In this instance, I personally don't see satellite radio as an intrusion, I see it as a much needed service to subscribers, and to employers. As in any business, you either improve your product, or take a second seat. Step up to the plate local stations and improve your product.
